

Fast 23: Charity — Zakāt (2)

- Zakāt is not simply obligatory charity. It is a state institution of a Muslim state. Where there is no Muslim state, it is a national institution of the Muslim community. The individual is not free to calculate and spend his zakāt as he likes. It must be collected by the state or the community on a national basis, and spent by the state or community.
- Where the Holy Quran describes the main heads of the expenditure of zakāt, it mentions an item of expenditure on officials appointed to collect and distribute the same. This shows clearly that, by the institution of zakāt, it contemplated either a department of the state or at least a public fund managed entirely by a public body. The donor is required to give zakāt to a fund which must be used for the uplift of the community. It was in this sense that the Holy Prophet understood it, and when he became head of the government, he made zakāt a state institution. He appointed officials to collect it and directed his governors to do the same in distant provinces.
- Zakāt was an annual charge on property which remained in the possession of a person for a whole year. It applied when the value of the property reached a certain limit, called niṣāb. Certain possessions were exempt. Zakāt was levied at almost a uniform rate of 2½ per cent of the accumulated wealth. Wealth has a tendency to accumulate, and zakāt aims at its partial redistribution in such a manner that the community, as a whole, may derive advantage from it. A part of the amassed wealth or capital of every individual is thus taken away annually and distributed among the poor and the needy.
- Where Muslims live under non-Muslim governments, and the collection and disbursement of zakāt cannot be undertaken by these governments, this duty devolves on the Muslim community as a whole, and the institution of zakāt must take the shape of a national Muslim institution in every country where there is a Muslim population.
- How zakāt should be spent: The Quran says:

“Charity (ṣadaqāt) is only for the poor and the needy, and those employed to administer it, and those whose hearts are made to incline to truth, and (to free) the captives, and those in debt, and in the way of Allah, and for the traveller — an ordinance (farīdah) from Allah, and Allah is Knowing, Wise.” (9:60)

إِنَّمَا الصَّدَقَاتُ لِلْفُقَرَاءِ وَالْمَسْكِينِ وَ
الْعَمِلِينَ عَلَيْهَا وَالْمَوْلَّاتِ قُلُوبُهُمْ وَفِي
الرِّقَابِ وَالْغَرَمِينَ وَفِي سَبِيلِ اللَّهِ وَابْنِ
السَّبِيلِ فَرِيضَةٌ مِّنَ اللَّهِ ۗ وَاللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ
حَكِيمٌ ﴿٦٠﴾

Zakāt is sometimes mentioned under the name of ṣadaqah, as it is in this verse. It means zakāt here because at the end of the verse it is called an “ordinance”, farīdah or an obligatory duty.

- Spending zakāt as mentioned here can be divided into three heads of expenditure: spending it on those who stand in need of help, spending it on the officials appointed to manage the fund, and spending it in “the way of Allah”.
- Under the first category of expenditure are the following kinds of people:
 1. The “poor”, which is taken to mean those who cannot earn through some disability.
 2. The “needy”, which is taken to mean those who are able to earn but require help in earning their livelihood.

These two kinds of beneficiaries are mentioned first, before mentioning the officials who administer it, because zakāt was established primarily to help them. Then in the same category are:

3. Those who wish to learn the truth but need financial help to do so. For example, non-Muslims wanting to study Islam, as well as people who made sacrifices to embrace Islam. Such persons may stand in need of financial assistance. This could also include any students who need help.
4. Those who are in slavery or servitude, so that zakāt can be spent to purchase their freedom and set them free. This would include people trapped in oppressive contracts of employment, from which they cannot escape without external help.
5. People suffering because of being burdened by debt, i.e., those who borrowed money due to dire need or through ignorance, and are exploited by lenders.
6. Travellers who are stranded in a foreign country or in a distant place, and are unable to reach their homes.

The last three kinds of people listed above are those who, due to their circumstances, are exploited by others. Islam has made it a fundamental of its teachings that the Muslim community or the Muslim government must assist such people.

- The second category of expenditure is on the maintenance of an establishment and office for the collection of zakāt.
- The third category of expenditure is described as “in the way of Allah”. This is primarily the defence of Islam, and in this age it means the propagation of the message of Islam to the world. Those involved in this work may be supported by the zakāt fund. But the words “in the way of Allah” also include any kind of charitable work not covered in the above list.
